While a drainage system seem simple to "plumb" around, there's more to it, your house have vents, traps, and clean gutters. The vents sticking up from the roof of your house allow air to enter the drainpipes. If there were no air supply coming from the vents, wastewater would not flow out properly and the water in the traps would need to be siphoned away. Leak Detection. Wolf Plumbing & Maintenance have leak detection equipment that can quickly and accurately find the source of leaks. What is that? Ground microphones or listening discs are acoustic listening devices that a plumber uses to find leaks. Also, an acoustic amplifier can be used to amplify the sound of plumbing leaks that may be too quiet to hear. This makes us faster than anyone else. Drain Systems. Whether your home is on a sewer or septic system, the systems within your home are essentially the same. Drainage systems do not depend on pressure, as supply systems do. Instead, waste matter leaves your house because the drainage pipes all pitch, or angle, downward. Gravity pulls the waste along. The sewer line continues this downward flow to a sewage treatment facility or a septic tank. You need our expertise to check your drainage system regularly.
